Why do disparate groups with unrelated and even contradictory agendas somehow come together to support any and all leftist actions? Who is their common enemy?

The answers are found in two riveting documentaries made by an independent film maker.

Nearly a decade ago, Idaho legislator Curtis Bowers wrote a "letter to the editor" about the earth-shattering changes in America's culture, and it became a local sensation. It was featured on newscasts and triggered demonstrations at the state Capital in Boise.

Curtis realized that he had kicked a hornet's nest by identifying communism as the ongoing, real threat to America that no one wants to admit. So, he made a stunning documentary about it.

In "Agenda: Grinding America Down," the widely circulated 2010 video that he wrote, directed and appeared in, he shows how the current political divide is marked not only by party differences but a war within the war: the assault on America's morality, faith, families and freedom.

Later, he released "Agenda II: Masters of Deceit" in 2017. Its subtitle is: "The issue is never the issue." By that he means that each individual policy dispute is only a tactic to advance the overall goal of promoting communism and global government.

In both documentaries, Curtis makes it clear that if nothing changes, America will soon join the failed socialist regimes that turn on their own people with a vengeance.

Mr. Bowers has a B.A in Business from Colorado Christian University and an M.A. in curriculum/instruction from the University of Colorado.

Curtis and his wife Laura have six children and make their home in Idaho.
