The world's largest country has been systematically disposing of baby girls via its "one-child" policy of forced abortion. At the same time, Chinese officials have looked the other way at sexual slavery. But a rising international coalition is bringing pressure on China to address these injustices, which our guest summarizes as "systematic, state-sponsored violence against women."

Reggie Littlejohn is prominently featured in "It's a Girl," the authoritative documentary film about gendercide in China and India.

Reggie is founder and president of Women's Rights Without Frontiers, an international coalition to expose and oppose forced abortion, gendercide and sexual slavery in China. Reggie also led the international effort to free blind activist Chen Guangcheng, who arrived in the United States on May 19, 2012. She and Chen

Guangcheng appeared together on a Voice of America broadcast on January 31, 2013.

Women's Rights Without Frontiers seeks to form a left-right, human rights and humanitarian coalition to end forced abortion and gendercide. Both pro-life and pro-choice venues have embraced this message. Reggie received the National Pro-Life Recognition Award at the 40th March for Life in Washington, D.C. on January 25, 2013. She was also the keynote speaker for the 2013 March for Life Canada in Ottawa, and for the 2013 National Right to Life Convention in Dallas.

An acclaimed international expert on China's One Child Policy, Reggie has testified six times at the United States Congress, three times at the European Parliament and has presented at the British, Irish and Canadian Parliaments as well. Her first address at the European Parliament redefined the debate about China's One Child Policy, revealing it to be systematic, state-sponsored violence against women. This address was included as a chapter in the book, "Human Rights in China After the Olympic Games," (Human Rights Without Frontiers, 2009), available on Amazon.com.

Reggie has briefed officials at the White House, the State Department, the United Nations and the Vatican. She is a frequent guest on radio and television programs, including CNN, C-SPAN and the BBC, and has issued several groundbreaking reports that are included in the Congressional Record.

"Reggie is prominently featured in "It's a Girl," the authoritative documentary film about gendercide in China and India. She premiered the film at the European and British Parliaments in November 2012 and in the Capitol Hill Visitors Center Auditorium in Washington, D.C. in April 2013. She screened the film three times at the United Nations Conference on the Status of Women in March, 2013.

A dynamic keynote speaker, Reggie has spoken at the Harvard and Stanford law schools, the Johns Hopkins and George Washington Universities, The Heritage Foundation, Institute for Cultural Diplomacy and the Victims of Communism Memorial Commemoration.

Reggie has appeared 13 times on Voice of America, the official U.S. broadcast into China, Taiwan and Hong Kong. WRWF has the only Chinese website in the world dedicated to exposing the brutal truth about forced abortion in China.

A graduate of Yale Law School, Reggie has represented Chinese refugees in their political asylum cases.
